“Yes We Can”

Barack Obama’s words resonate loud and clear with Prairie View A&M University students “Yes We Can”.

In February over a thousand students marched 7.3 miles to the county court house in Hempstead to use the two voting machines available for early voting. As evidenced from this Flickr photo and the accompanying You Tube video on the Burnt Orange report website, Prairie View students displayed determination that made national history.

Regardless of your opinion on the outcome of this historic election it is undeniable that young people made a significant impact. This election more than any other made use of technology to educate and influence young voters. The Internet was used to attract voters, collect donations and for the dissemination of information.

The changes in technology have opened up the world to young people who are clearly taking advantage of it. While it is often feared that the Internet is just a tool for mischievousness, it is encouraging that young people are using the Internet for political discourse and positive communication.

As educators we commend our youth and accept the responsibility of ensuring that future generations are better informed than the preceding. Living in the Information Age we have vast opportunities for the use of communication technologies. President Elect Barack Obama made use of it, our students are making use of it and we need to make use of it. We have seen the social effectiveness of the Internet to unite and to incite. Our students have shown us that we are a society that is capable of creating change. They have also shown us that we are a society that is capable of mastering technology.

Survivor Stories Inspire Students

The Collegiate Cancer Council sponsored a Breast Cancer Awareness Seminar, for Prairie View students on October 30th in the New Science Building.

Prairie View students were inspired by the personal stories of survival. The following is an excerpt from one of the stories:

“I experienced my most memorable yet life-transforming time in 2002.

Memorable because it was the year I traveled to Europe. I felt alive, beautiful, fortunate and actually quite lucky to have this experience, the opportunity to explore a new country.

However, unbeknownst to me at the time, the year 2002 would become significant and life transforming for another reason, because it was the year I was diagnosed with breast cancer.

Book Review—The Audacity of Hope by Barack Obama

On June 25, 2005, I was one of 10,000 librarians who listened as Barack Obama gave the opening speech at the American Library Association's Annual Conference in Chicago. This was before Barack announced candidacy for President and before we imagined it could happen. However, it was obvious that Obama was a force of nature with the ability to mesmerize and inspire diverse audiences. Obama credits libraries with helping him get his first job as a community organizer, which propelled him into politics. His book The Audacity of Hope provides insight not only into his views on politics but also his values and his dreams.

The media made note of Obama's affiliation with Reverend Wright, while it wasn't mentioned that Obama's mother was atheist, yet he referred to her in his book as "the most spiritually awakened person he had ever known", because she taught him the value of respect for human dignity.

The Audacity of Hope is not written as thoughts of protest. In fact it is more of a straight forward account of Obama's personal experiences with both sides of government. There are places in the book that only a person of color could understand. For example, Obama describes his first meeting with President Bush. After shaking the President's hand Bush immediately turned to his aide for hand sanitizer. This did not unnerve Obama he merely requested sanitizer himself.

The Audacity of Hope is Obama's vision of a government united to tackle our country's growing problems. As echoed in many of his speeches "There is not a Black America and White America and Latino America and Asian America — there's the United States of America."

I am originally from Trinidad yet I have resided in the United States since I was a teenager. As a result, I do not have any family here other than my two adult children. The majority of my family still lives in Trinidad. When I was diagnosed, I was a single mom of a college age daughter and son who had recently relocated to Florida to support his sister while she completed her Master's degree.

My daughter flew in on the day that I was discharged, one week after my surgery. She was such a blessing! Providing support in all areas of my recovery; mentally, spiritually, emotionally and physically. She made sure that I "felt" pretty by providing pedicures, manicures, washing and styling my hair. These may seem like insignificant things to some, but these little things contributed to the healing process. My healing was fast and without complications. I know that my positive attitude contributed to my healing, in addition to access to excellent health care, support of family, friends, colleagues, and most importantly early detection."
